The memory of Alexis de Tocquevitle belongs secreely less to America than to France. The volumes of his Inedited Works and Correspondence, with the Memoric by his friend Gustave de Feanmont, which have lately appeared in Paris, have a special claim to the attention of American readers. Intrinsic Interest of these volumes is very great, as well for the soundness of the political opinions and reflections which they contain, as for the insight they aford into the character of one of the most remarkable men of the century.
